At sunny day Meggy, Ned, Berty and Carl were in the garden.

Carl wasn't happy and didn't pay much attention to other kids.

- What's wrong, Carl? - Asked Meggy.

- Nothing. - Answered Carl.

- You look like everything is wrong. - Agreed Berty with Meggy.

- You just invent. - Disagree Ned.

- Maybe, girls are a little bit right. - Sighed Carl.

- What? - Didn't believe Ned.

- It's about time.

- Time? - repeated after Carl Berty.

- Yes. - Continued Carl. - We have some time to play here, later we will be back in kindergarten.

- Yes. What's wrong? - Asked Meggy.

- Will be much better, if time doesn't exist. - Said Carl.

- How? - asked Ned.

- Without time we could do what we want, as long as we want. - Promised Carl.

- I don't know. - Has doubts Berty.

- We could spend all not existing time for fun.

- Not bad. - Agreed with Carl Meggy.

- Time to turn to kindergarten. - Soft voice called kids.

When kids return to kindergarten, Carl walks slowly, he thought about how to avoid time.

- Time, time, time. For everything is proper time. - Mumbled Carl.

- What's wrong with that? - Asked Berty.

- It's not what I want.

- And you want – asked Meggy.

- To do what I want, when I want. - Honestly answered Carl.

- Have endless time to play. - Dreamed aloud Ned.

- It will be wonderful. - Agreed Berty.

- I want life without time. - Shouted Carl.

- I also want to live without time. - Laughed Berty.

- Without time. - Agreed Ned.

- Without time. - Whispered Meggy.

Loud sound of clocks filled room and all became dark.

- Where are we? - Asked Ned.

- I think inside clock. - Suggested Carl.

- I don't hear it sound. - Doubted Berty.

- We are in place where is no time. - Carl was sure about what he talked.

- We could play all day long. - Proposed Meggy.

- There is no time, we will play all the time. - Reminded Carl.

Kids played, run and jumped. More and more they run and jumped, but later they laugh became quieter till they sit and can't invent more plays.

- It's boring. - said Meggy.

- Endless games. - Not happy sounded Berty's voice.

- We are without time. We have no idea, when to eat. - Complained Ned.

- When we should return home. - Carl was sad.

- To play without limit was good. - Agreed Meggy. - But spend all time on games – I am bored.

- I am tired. - Berty was honest.

- Perhaps there is some reason that should be time for everything. - Talked Carl.

- For fun and for sleep. - Continued Meggy.

- For games and for eat. - Insisted Ned.

- If we could return. - Said aloud Berty, what about thought all kids.

- We could! - Carl believed in his words.

- How? - asked Ned.

- We just need to say that we were wrong. We need time back. - Carl knew that they could do this.

- We try. - Agreed Meggy.

Children hold their hands together, stay in circle.

- Sorry, time. We need you in our life. - Said Carl.

- We need time. - said Ned.

- I need time in my life. - Said Berty.

- Please, time, return back. - Said Meggy.

Bright light and loud sound of clock made kids laugh.

Suddenly children were back in their kindergarten.

- We are back! - screamed happy Carl.

- Back! - Also happy was Berty.

- Kid's now it's time to walk in the garden. - Soft voice reminded them.

- Time to have fun. - Agreed Meggy.

Children with laugh went to the garden.

- What you think about time now, Carl? - asked Berty.

- I like when we have time for everything and know what to do. - Said Carl with smile.
